Two Angry Moms – Posts First Twelve Minutes of Film Via Website

-Two Angry Moms Fight for Real Food in Schools-

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

For the first time since the release of Two Angry Moms, producer Amy Kalafa has made the opening twelve minutes of the film available to the general public via the Two Angry Moms website. Citing statistical information that supports the need for school food reform and setting the stage for the battle over control and change, this opening sequence touches on important issues that the film explores in detail. What are our children eating in school, and ultimately, who is determining that?

The Lancets' newly released study reporting that artificial food additives increase hyperactivity in children supports the statistical and anecdotal information provided in Two Angry Moms and further encourages the adoption of successful practices that the film outlines.
