IT'S A MOVIE, IT'S A MOVEMENT

Summer 2008

www.angrymoms.org

Dear Amy,

It's been a busy summer for angry moms. The USDA is getting an earful at hearings scheduled around the country, and we hope you'll take a moment to lend your voice to the conversation - in person or in writing (read angry moms of the month article).

We've got a great new sponsor offering you free screening kits, so hurry and claim yours. Now you can generate momentum for the movement by holding a house party screening of Two Angry Moms and gathering a group for lunch at school during School Nutrition Week in October.

And a personal offering from my family to yours - a new screenings of up to 30 people.

The goal is to get two million "angry moms" actively engaged in making excellence in school food the norm in America. This newsletter goes out to leaders across the country who can make that happen - so if you haven't already, sign up as a host now! We've made it easy with our turnkey screening planner.

Your house party is a great way to organize a group to discuss local school food issues and create a plan of action.

List your event for free on BraveNewTheaters to receive a $50 discount coupon. You can list your screening as "open to the public" or "private invitation only".

2nd ANNUAL SCHOOL LUNCH-IN

A great way to galvanize moms (and dads) across the country is through participation in the National Lunch-In during School Nutrition week, October 13 - 17. Parents should see first-hand what their kids are eating (and not eating) at school.

Most parents have no idea what is being served in their child's classroom and school cafeteria. While the idea of a "Lunch-In" may seem radical, it actually comes from USDA guidelines suggesting that every parent should go to school and have lunch with their child.

Ahzjah Simons of the Children's Wellness Network sponsored my visit. This month, my Angry Mom of the Month isn't one person; it's a whole network of people I met in Atlanta in June. Jennifer Franklin and Ahzjah Simons of the Children's Wellness Network sponsored my visit. Their network is comprised of non-profit groups like Georgia Organics, and Sevananda, a local health food store, as well as local caterers, garden groups and many parents. Atlanta's a big city; maybe you live in a small town. How do you create a movement in your community?

Atlanta is also home to the CDC and the next site of the USDA listening sessions (next Wednesday, August 20th!) that will inform policy decisions impacting school food for some years to come. Some of the Atlanta moms have asked me to solicit input for them to bring to these hearings. They envision boxes of your letters, busloads of kids, and an audience filled with angry moms. MORE

NEW VIDEO!

Some think that "Kid Food" is limited to nuggets, burgers and pizza. Anyone who's gardened, shopped or cooked with kids knows better. This new series is for families that love learning about culture and food.

Our pilot episode is about an American family that traces their food roots to France. These kids discover French family favorites - from crepes to green beans, in a fun-filled food adventure.

You can download the first three parts of the pilot episode online for free. We'll add more clips to the website in the coming weeks.

The full hour-long Pilot Episode is available on DVD exclusively through our website. Our Family Our Food is filled with cooking tips, history and delicious family-friendly recipes. We haven't met a child yet who doesn't want to try something they've discovered on Our Family Our Food.
